Concerns Related to the Advising Relationship

- The relationship is dynamic and is defined by the expectations, needs and interests of both student and advisor.
- Conflict is sometimes a part of the advising relationship. Engaging constructively in conflict can provide for diverse perspectives and positive outcomes.
- Clarifying expectations early in the relationship can minimize misunderstanding.

Academic Concerns

Keep in mind that there are many causes of academic difficulty including:

- Difficulty in course material, including socialization into a new field, difficulty balancing new roles of student and teacher/researcher, and limited experience writing for new scholarly audiences.
- Diagnosed or undiagnosed disability issues (Attention Deficit Disorder, Learning Disability).
- Mental health concerns (depression, anxiety, etc.).
- Cultural, family, or personal concerns.

Many students appreciate an instructor taking the initiative to express concern about their academic performance. Faculty may be able to help a student with content-related difficulty, or may wish to refer to the resources below for these and other concerns.

Employment Concerns

- Graduate assistant employment is often integrally related to a graduate student’s success in the graduate academic program and to financial resources, such as tuition benefits. When things go wrong at work, there can be ripple effects that can negatively impact an academic career.
- Refer to Tips for TAs and Supervising Instructors for helpful advice on working better together.

Personal Concerns

Be clear about what you can and cannot do. Respect the student’s value system and culture.

- Recognize the limits of your role and refer to other professionals when needed.
- Refrain from making promises you cannot or may not be able to keep.
- If the student or others are in danger, you will need to act; so be cautious about promises of confidentiality.
- Doing something in response to a student’s concerns is almost always better than doing nothing.
- Students may be in a new and potentially disorienting day-to-day cultural context while some students also feel disconnected from their normal support groups.
